

Pressrelease from Uddeholms AB

Maybe the most advanced app you have seen

In the end of November, Uddeholm is launching a new app for smartphones. It contains a lot of information and new functions useful for global tool makers, tool users and OEM:s.

The app will provide information about the Uddeholm product program, services and capabilities. It also has a product finder with dynamic search, weight calculator, unit converter, contact information and more. All in all, maybe the most advanced mobile app in the tool steel business that you have ever seen.

“It is important that we are able to meet and serve our customers wherever they are. The app-world is new for us, but we believe that this will be a very useful tool for our sales force around the world as well as for our customers”, says Per Hasselström, Managing Director at Uddeholms AB.

Uddeholm has worked together with the consultant company Sogeti and voestalpine group-IT in this project. As a first step, the app is designed only for iPhone, iOS (can be used on iPad also) but in the future it can be converted for Android, Blackberry phones and tablets also.

“Uddeholm is an innovative company with a very long history and with this project they demonstrate again that they really are at the cutting edge”, says Andreas Sjöstedt, Business Manager at Sogeti in Karlstad, Sweden. “By developing this app, Uddeholm and Sogeti show that mobile apps are far from just fun and games, it is also an increasingly critical component of business and communication strategy for large manufacturing companies. Mobile apps are a way to differentiate, offer new added value, increase competitiveness and ultimately make more money.”

The data is stored on the device on first installation. Every time the user starts the app it will look for changes and upload new data. Supporting information such as brochures is uploaded on demand and can be stored on the device. This allows the app to be used off line.
